G. Behavior-Change Procedures, 25 questions (14%)

Question G 1: During an intervention to increase a child's participation in group activities, the behavior analyst uses a token economy where tokens can be exchanged for preferred activities. Parents express concern that the child may feel overly controlled by the reinforcement system. What should the behavior analyst prioritize to address these ethical concerns?

- A. Discontinue the token economy entirely to reduce perceived control.
 - B. Educate the parents on the effectiveness of token economies in all settings.
 - C. Adjust the reinforcement procedure to align with the client's dignity and autonomy.
 - D. Increase the frequency of reinforcement to enhance the procedure's effectiveness.

H. Selecting and Implementing Interventions, 20 questions (11%)

 - C. The client will behave better when feeling upset.
 - D. The client will stop showing aggression toward others.

Mock Exam C - Answers Key

G. Behavior-Change Procedures

G 1: Correct Answer: Correct Answer: C. Adjust the reinforcement procedure to align with the client's dignity and autonomy. Explanation: This choice reflects a key ethical requirement in behavior analysis: respecting the dignity and autonomy of the client. While token economies are evidence-based and effective, they must be implemented in a way that is acceptable and empowering to the individual and their caregivers. If the parents feel the system is too controlling, the BCBA should modify the procedure to maintain its effectiveness while aligning. Why not the other options? A. Discontinuing the token economy entirely may not be necessary. It is a valid intervention that can still be used in a more collaborative or autonomy-supportive way. B. Educating the parents is helpful, but doing so without adjusting the procedure disregards their concerns and risks alienating important stakeholders. D. Increasing the frequency of reinforcement may exacerbate the feeling of control and does not address the ethical issue raised by the parents.

H. Selecting and Implementing Interventions

H 1: Correct Answer: B. The client will engage in no more than two instances of aggression (e.g., hitting, kicking) per week for eight consecutive weeks. Explanation: This goal is specific, observable, and measurable. It defines exactly what behaviors are considered aggression (hitting, kicking), sets a clear frequency (no more than two instances), and specifies a time frame (eight consecutive weeks). A measurable goal allows all team members to consistently track and evaluate progress. Why not the other options: A. "The client will reduce their aggressive tendencies over time" is vague and lacks measurable criteria. It does not specify what "aggressive tendencies" are or how much reduction is expected. C. "The client will behave better when feeling upset" is subjective. "Behave better" is not operationalized and could mean different things to different observers. D. "The client will stop showing aggression toward others" is unrealistic and absolute. Expecting zero aggression without defining a measurable standard may set the client up for failure.

I. Personnel Supervision and Management

I 1: Correct Answer: B. Model how to teach color identification before asking the technician to practice. Explanation: In BST, after giving clear written or verbal instructions, the next step is to model the correct behavior. Modeling shows the trainee exactly what the skill looks like before expecting them to perform it. This supports better learning and reduces errors during practice. Why not the other options: A. Assign the technician to practice independently without help — Skipping modeling could lead to practicing mistakes without a clear example. C. Observe the technician silently during client sessions — Observation should happen after modeling and rehearsal, not immediately after instructions. D. Ask the technician to reread the written instructions before modeling — Rereading does not replace the critical modeling step needed for skill acquisition.
